NEW QUESTION: 4

Which of the following is NOT a property of a public key cryptosystem?

(Let P represent the private key, Q represent the public key and M the plaintext message.)

- A. P and Q are difficult to generate from a particular key value.
- B. $Q[P(M)] = M$
- C. It is computationally infeasible to derive P from Q.
- D. $P[Q(M)] = M$

Answer: A

Explanation:

The answer refers to the initial computation wherein the private and public keys are computed. The computation in this direction is relatively straightforward. Answers " $Q[P(M)] = M$ " and " $P[Q(M)] = M$ " state the true property of public key cryptography which is that a plaintext message encrypted with the private key can be decrypted by the public key and vice versa. Answer "It is computationally infeasible to derive P from Q" states that it is computationally infeasible to derive the private key from the public key. Obviously, this is a critical property of public key cryptography.
