NEW QUESTION: 3

Over the past several years, change requests from lines of business (LOB) have increased significantly. Your IT department is having a hard time addressing this increase in requests, due to their time to market requirements and the time it takes for all affected lines of business to perform testing on the new/updated functionality. How can SOA be best utilized to address your challenge?

- A. The service infrastructure can provide the ability to mediate and stage the deployment of multiple versions of a Service which will allow multiple versions of a Business Activity Service to be available at run time. This enables different LOB consumers to access different versions of the Service.
- B. Each LOB is allocated their own Presentation Service. This has the advantage that each LOB consumer can have a different user experience from other LOB consumers and have the ability to hide the new/updated functionality.
- C. To address common functional requirements, each LOB is allocated their own Business Activity Service. This has the advantage that when a LOB Business Activity Service is updated only a single LOB is affected.
- D. Each LOB utilizes a separate service infrastructure environment. Service configurations can be propagated between environments, allowing different LOB consumers to access different Services that address the same functionality.
