NEW QUESTION: 2

For the following protocols, which one provides a mechanism to transparently intercept and redirect CIFS traffic from a client to a local Cisco Wide Area Application engine?

- A. Hot Standby Routing Protocol (HSRP)
- B. Virtual Router Redundancy Protocol (VRRP)
- C. File Transport Protocol (FTP)
- D. Web Cache Communication Protocol (WCCP)

Answer: D

Explanation:

Web Cache Control Protocol Description The Web Cache Control Protocol (WCCP) feature allows you to use a Cisco Cache Engine to handle web traffic, thus reducing transmission costs and downloading time. This traffic includes user requests to view pages and graphics on World Wide Web servers, whether internal or external to your network, and the replies to those requests. shows a sample WCCP network configuration.

When a user (client) requests a page from a web server (located in the Internet, in this case), the router sends the request to a Cisco Cache Engine (Cache 1, Cache 2, or Cache 3). If the cache engine has a copy of the requested page in storage, the engine sends the user that page. Otherwise, the engine gets the requested page and the objects on that page from the web server, stores a copy of the page and its objects (caches them), and forwards the page and objects to the user.

WCCP transparently redirects HTTP requests from the intended server to a Cisco Cache Engine. End users do not know that the page came from the cache engine rather than the originally requested web server. The Using the Cisco Cache Engine publication contains detailed information about the Cisco Cache Engine and discusses alternative network configurations.

A client receives a cervical intracavity radium implant as part of her therapy. A common side effect of a cervical implant is:

- A. stomatitis.
- B. creamy, pink-tinged vaginal drainage.

- C. xerostomia.
- D. constipation.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

Creamy, pink-tinged vaginal drainage persists for 1 to 2 months after removal of a cervical implant.

Diarrhea, not constipation, is usually a side effect of cervical implants. Stomatitis and xerostomia are local side effects of radiation to the mouth. Physiological Adaptation
