NEW QUESTION: 3

A solution implementer is considering the following active-standby configuration between two DataPower appliances:

IBM 000-274 : Practice Test

In a simulated power failure of Appliance 1 using this active-standby configuration in a sandbox environment, Appliance 2 did not take over the active interface. What could be causing this behavior?

- A. It can take several minutes for the standby interfaces to be active in an active-standby configuration.
- B. Appliances in the active-standby configuration must be in the same network subnet and broadcast domain.
- C. In an active-standby configuration, the priority of Appliance 2 must be changed to 99 for the failure takeover to work.
- D. There might be a firewall between the two appliances which has not been configured to allow broadcast traffic in an active-standby configuration.

Answer: B
