NEW QUESTION: 3

Your company has an Active Directory domain.

All servers run Windows Server 2008 R2.

Your company uses an Enterprise Root certificate authority (CA).

You need to ensure that revoked certificate information is highly available.

What should you do?

A. Implement an Online Certificate Status Protocol (OCSP) responder by using Network Load Balancing.

B. Create a new Group Policy Object (GPO) that allows users to trust peer certificates. Link the GPO to the domain.

C. Publish the trusted certificate authorities list to the domain by using a Group Policy Object (GPO).

D. Implement an Online Certificate Status Protocol (OCSP) responder by using an Internet Security and Acceleration Server array.

Answer: A

AD CS: Online Certificate Status Protocol Support

Certificate revocation is a necessary part of the process of managing certificates issued by certification authorities (CAs). The most common means of communicating certificate status is by distributing certificate revocation lists (CRLs).

In the Windows 2008 operating system, public key infrastructures (PKIs) where the use of conventional CRLs is not an optimal solution, an Online Responder based on the Online Certificate Status Protocol (OCSP) can be used to manage and distribute revocation status information.

What does OCSP support do?

The use of Online Responders that distribute OCSP responses, along with the use of CRLs, is one of two common methods for conveying information about the validity of certificates.

Unlike CRLs, which are distributed periodically and contain information about all certificates that have been revoked or suspended, an Online Responder receives and responds only to requests from clients for information about the status of a single certificate. The amount of data retrieved per request remains constant no matter how many revoked certificates there might be.

In many circumstances, Online Responders can process certificate status requests more efficiently than by using CRLs.

Adding one or more Online Responders can significantly enhance the flexibility and scalability of an organization's PKI.

Implementing an OSCP Responder: Part V High Availability

There are two major pieces in implementing the High Availability Configuration. The first step is to add the OSCP Responders to what is called an Array. When OSCP Responders are configured in an Array, the configuration of the OSCP responders can be easily maintained, so that all Responders in the Array have the same configuration. The configuration of the Array Controller is used as the baseline configuration that is then applied to other members of the Array.

The second piece is to load balance the OSCP Responders. Load balancing of the OSCP responders is what actually provides fault tolerance.
