NEW QUESTION: 1

A user is planning to host a web server as well as an app server on a single EC2 instance which is a part of the public subnet of a VPC. How can the user setup to have two separate public IPs and separate security groups for both the application as well as the web server?

A. Launch a VPC instance with two network interfaces. Assign a separate security group and elastic IP to them.

B. Launch VPC with two separate subnets and make the instance a part of both the subnets.

C. Launch a VPC instance with two network interfaces. Assign a separate security group to each and AWS will assign a separate public IP to them.

D. Launch a VPC with ELB such that it redirects requests to separate VPC instances of the public subnet.

Answer: A

Explanation:

If you need to host multiple websites (with different IPs) on a single EC2 instance, the following is the suggested method from AWS.

Launch a VPC instance with two network interfaces

Assign elastic IPs from VPC EIP pool to those interfaces

(Because, when the user has attached more than one network interface with an instance, AWS cannot assign public IPs to them.)

Assign separate Security Groups if separate Security Groups are needed

This scenario also helps for operating network appliances, such as firewalls or load balancers that have multiple private IP addresses for each network interface.

NEW QUESTION: 2

An application is using a custom library to make HTTP calls directly to AWS service endpoints. The application is experiencing transient errors that are causing processes to stop when each error is first encountered. A request has been made to make the application more resilient by adding error retries and exponential backoff.

How should a developer implement the changes with MINIMAL custom code?

A. Add a Retry-After HTTP header to API requests.

B. Use the AWS CLI to configure the retry settings in a named profile

C. Use an AWS SDK and set retry-specific configurations.

D. Change the custom library to retry on 5xx errors only

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 3
